

Wealth Planning Strategies

Smart Ways to Take Control of a Trust

Many successful families use trusts to minimize taxes, transfer wealth and protect assets from creditors and others. You may have already set up a trust, or you may hold an inheritance you received in a trust that was created decades ago.

Trouble is, too many families relinquish more control over their trusts than they need to, basically hoping that the trustees they have put in charge will serve them well. They take a passive role in their trusts rather than an active or more proactive role.

The result: Families can potentially put their larger goals at risk. Yes, trustees have a legal obligation to serve you and your family. But they also have a fiduciary duty to serve their owners and shareholders! These corporate trustees have a real financial interest in retaining control over your trust. They also try to avoid controversy: If a dispute among beneficiaries breaks out, they often become passive and look to a court to instruct them.

Clearly, relying on a third party to think and wisely act solely in your best interests at all times is rarely the smart move. The good news: You don't have to put your faith entirely in someone else when it comes to your trust. Over the years, trust law has evolved significantly.

Today, there are more options than ever that allow for greater family control—options that didn't exist or that weren't commonly used back when many trusts in use were established. By thinking and acting more like an asset owner than a trust grantor or trust beneficiary, you can potentially set yourself up for better results down the road.

There are three important ways to ensure you take the reins when it comes to a trust.

Option 1: Retain the power to remove a trustee

The person or entity serving as your trustee will have a large impact on how the trust assets perform and how they are distributed—so it's crucial to serve as a check and balance to a trustee. A simple trust provision providing that a beneficiary (perhaps a surviving spouse) has the power to remove the trustee for any reason can act as an important control over your trust. This power incentivizes the trustee to manage the assets well and make distributions appropriately. No matter what other interests the trustee may have or what his or her preferences may be for managing the trust, if you have the power to remove the trustee, trustees listen better.

Option 2: Be a non-independent trustee

If you're a beneficiary of an "absolute discretion" trust and appoint yourself as trustee with distribution power, the trust's assets will be taxed in your estate and creditor protection benefits will be undone. But making distributions is just one of the trustee's functions. There's also the vital matter of how the trust's assets are managed to

The upshot

Don't be passive when it comes to your role as a trust grantor or trust beneficiary. Think like an owner and use the power available to you. That way, you'll maximize your trust's effectiveness and ensure that your trust—and the people involved in it—is behaving as it should based on your needs, goals and wishes.

Don't assume a trustee overseeing your trust has only your best interests in mind. Get set up to have control over the trust as much as possible.

Trustees will be attuned to your wishes and needs if they understand they can be removed for any reason.

preserve and grow family wealth—and in this area, you can exert influence, power and even control.

Specifically, you and your spouse and children (or any other beneficiary) can serve alongside another independent trustee and have all powers of a trustee except for the power to make distributions. Combining the ability to serve as a “family” or “non-independent” trustee with the ability to remove the independent trustee who has distribution powers gives you flexibility and control over the management and performance of your trust.

Option 3: Direct your trustee

There are two significant benefits that an institutional trustee can provide that cannot be obtained with individual trustees (such as your old college roommate).

- Institutional trustees have a great deal of experience and capability in managing trusts and in keeping detailed, accurate records of a trust’s property and transactions. This makes accounting and tax return preparation easier, as well as institutionalizes knowledge in a way that is not possible with an individual trustee.

- The grantor, with an institutional trustee, can establish the trust in a state of his or her choosing—even if the grantor, beneficiaries and trust assets otherwise have no contact with the preferred state. Just like a corporation or a partnership (or similar legal entity), a trust must be formed under the laws of a single state. While it is possible to establish a trust in any state, some are better than others.

What differentiates a directed trustee from a traditional trustee is right in the name—the trustee is “directed.” Instead of making distribution or investment decisions, the trustee is directed by appointed advisors to take such actions.

Having a directed trustee can provide great benefits at a modest cost. By having a directed trustee, you can establish a trust or possibly move an existing trust to a jurisdiction that provides additional benefits to you, your family and your trust. You, or another person, could have the power to remove the directed trustee at some future point if the arrangement no longer functions well or is beneficial for the family.

This report is an executive summary of our e-book.
For a complete complimentary report, call or email.

Paul Byron Hill, MBA, MFP, MSFS, ChFC®, CFP® is a nationally recognized Wealth Management Professional, Financial Educator and Author, written about in Money, Fortune, and Forbes, among others. As co-Author of Retire Abundantly, Paul has been interviewed by businessman James Malinchak, author of 20 books and featured on ABC-TV’s hit series, Secret Millionaire. Reuters recognized Paul and his firm as one of 500 “Top Advisers,” featured him in an interview on their AdvicePoint website, and honored him at a New York City gala event. Professional Financial Strategies, Inc., the independent firm he founded in 1993, consistently has been ranked as a leading wealth management firm.

Paul and his firm act as a personal chief financial officer for clients, bringing together a distinctive multi-disciplinary wealth management process with specialists that integrate retirement planning with investment management, mitigating taxes, protecting assets, and passing on a legacy for family, community and causes to make a greater impact.

In 1983, Paul earned a pioneering designation as a Certified Financial Planner (CFP®), and then ChFC® (Chartered Financial Consultant) and ATA (Accredited Tax Advisor). He earned his MBA in Finance from the Simon Business School at the University of Rochester. His extensive education includes MFP (Master of Science in Financial Planning) and MSFS (Master of Science in Financial Services). Paul has been presented with the Albert Nelson Marquis Lifetime Achievement Award by Who’s Who.

Disclosure: Professional Financial Strategies, Inc. is an investment advisor registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission, and is an independent, fee-only firm. CFP® professionals are fiduciaries with a duty of loyalty and care, and licensed by the Certified Financial Planner Board of Standards. A printed copy of the Firm’s current disclosure brochure discussing advisory services and fees is available upon request.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT: This article was published by the Virtual Family Office Inner Circle, a global financial concierge group working with affluent individuals and families and is distributed with its permission. Copyright 2018 by AES Nation, LLC. This report is intended to be used for educational purposes only and you should not assume that any discussion or information contained in this paper serves as the receipt of, or as a substitute for, personalized investment advice. Professional Financial Strategies, Inc. is neither a law firm nor a certified public accounting firm, and so no portion of the newsletter content should be construed as legal or accounting advice. Paul Byron Hill and Professional Financial are not affiliated with AES Nation, LLC. A printed copy of the Professional Financial’s current disclosure brochure discussing advisory services and fees is available upon request by calling 585.218.9080.